

INGEAR

Got Game?

With more than 1 million units sold, Nintendo's Game Boy has quite a following with adults. Now, in Advance SP form, the game player is even more adult friendly. Its silver, clamshell design resembles a fancy PDA. In addition, a reflective TFT LCD display with an integrated front light provides increased detail and more vibrant colors.

Nintendo Game Boy Advance SP,
US$99.95;

www.nintendo.com.

Circle 291 on reader
service
card.

Paper Weight

One complaint from owners of notepad computers has been the weight. Those portly portables can be a drag.

The NEC Versa LitePad brings tablet computing a bit closer to the ideal. At 2.2 pounds, it's still heavier than a pad of paper, but it's much lighter than the competition's.

NEC Versa LitePad,
US$2399; www.nec.com.

Circle 292 on
reader service card.

Cable Carryall

Sure, you can bunch up your cables with rubber bands and stuff them in a zip-lock, but it's not good for your cables and it's not good for your image.

RoadWired's Cable Stable carries all of your cables, connectors, and accessories in a leather case that's as refined as your presentations. RoadWired Cable Stable Deluxe, US$59.59; www.roadwired.com.

Circle 293 on reader service card.

Media Raider

No, it's not another Game Boy, but Panasonic's all-in-one multi-A/V device. Contained within this compact unit are an MPEG4 movie camera, a video recorder, a digital still camera, a jukebox, and a 2-inch LCD monitor.

For a glimpse of the SV-AV30 in action, Angelina Jolie will be sporting one in the latest installment of the Tomb Raider series. Panasonic SV-AV30, US$399.99; www.panasonic.com.

Circle 294 on reader service card.

