Little Voice

Transfer up to 330 minutes of digital audio to your PC or Mac with the Olympus DS-330. This pocket-sized recorder utilizes a USB docking station to quickly transfer voice files into one of five separate folders, where files can then be organized or transferred again. Other niceties include noise cancellation technology, a variable-control voice actuator to automatically start and stop recording, and a back-lit LCD display for use in low-light conditions.

Where'd You Get Those Veepers?

Get the look and feel of streaming video with a standard 2D image. Pulse's Veepers technology allows anyone to create interactive characters at 1/50th the file size of traditional video.

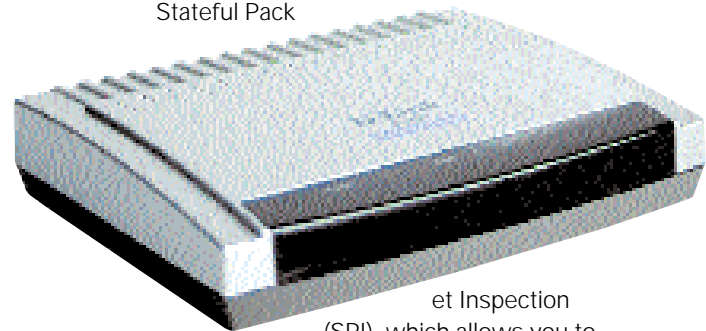

Veepers works by taking a single 2D photo or character image and creating a photo-real, 3D "clone" of the original, complete with lip-synching and automated text-to-speech functionality. A click-and-drag user interface requires no 3D authoring experience.

Pulse Veepers, US$50,000 - US$70,000 depending on level of text-to-speech support; www.pulse3d.com

Express Route

Ready to share your cable or DSL Internet connection at your home office? You'll need a router. D-Link's Express Ethernet DI-604 is loaded with technology typically found on more expensive units.

Features include an integrated firewall, Stateful Pack et Inspection (SPI), which allows you to deny access to the network based on customizable rules, and group filters to provide basic content blocking.
