In Communicado

Combine a cell phone and a PDA. It's a sensible idea that has eluded sensible application—until now.

Handspring's new Treo fits neatly into a shirt pocket, provides all of the niceties of cell phones and PDAs, but also includes a built-in keyboard, SMS text messaging, and the Blaze Web browser.

More Plasma, Please

You may not need it, but you know you want one. Boasting 1280x768 resolution and a 160-degree viewing angle, the 50-inch PDP 503-CMX is Pioneer's latest in XGA professional plasma displays.

This third-generation display offers lower power consumption, True-Matrix Imaging for increased brightness, and a new expansion slot for end-user customization.

Hot Keys

The new Office Keyboard from Microsoft is less like a keyboard and more like command central for your Office applications. In addition to its ergonomic design, the keyboard offers a Single Touch Pad, 19 hotkeys for single-press access to common commands, built-in keyboard scroll wheel, and an application key for easy navigation between open applications.

X-Rated

Taking the show on the road doesn't mean you have to leave performance behind. Despite weighing less than 2 pounds, Lightware's V-1080 projector offers XGA resolution, built-in DVI digital interface for HDTV capability, picture in picture, and four-way keystone correction.

A full-function remote and extensive onscreen menus ease operation.
