

INGEAR

A New Axiom >>

Targeted squarely at the education and training market, Axonix's innovative Gigabit SuperView provides an all-in-one full-screen, full-motion, video-on-demand solution. Users can record, store, and stream hundreds of videos to users over any LAN, WAN, or Internet network.

Axonix Gigabit SuperView, www.axonix.com.

Circle 294 on reader service card.

Sharp Picture >>

Dell has built its reputation on delivering a lot for a little, and the UltraSharp 1901FP LCD monitor is no exception. Users will enjoy a bevy of easy adjustments such as tilt, swivel, and height, as well as the option of portrait and landscape orientations. There's also a batch of four USB 2.0 ports that are sure to come in handy.

Dell UltraSharp 1901FP, US$749; www.dell.com.

Circle 291 on reader service card.

Master Card >>

For speedy throughput in mix-mode wireless environments, it's hard to better Netgear's WG511 PC card, which features support for both 802.11b and the newer high-speed standard 802.11g.

A printed quick-start resource and CD-ROM aid installation. Should you need a bit more help, Netgear offers 24/7 tech support by phone.

Netgear WG511, US$66.44; www.netgear.com.

Circle 292 on reader service card.

Talk to the Wrist >>

The X2X is the first watch to include a two-way radio. With 22 channels—14 FRS and 8 GMRS—you can keep in touch with friends and co-workers at distances of up to two miles. An optional headset lets you talk handsfree and spares you from speaking into your wrist, though you do lose some of the secret agent appeal.

Xact Communications WristLinx X2X, US$39.98; www.xactcommunication.com.

Circle 293 on reader service card.

