AUTOMATED TRAINING ON THE NET OR INTRANET

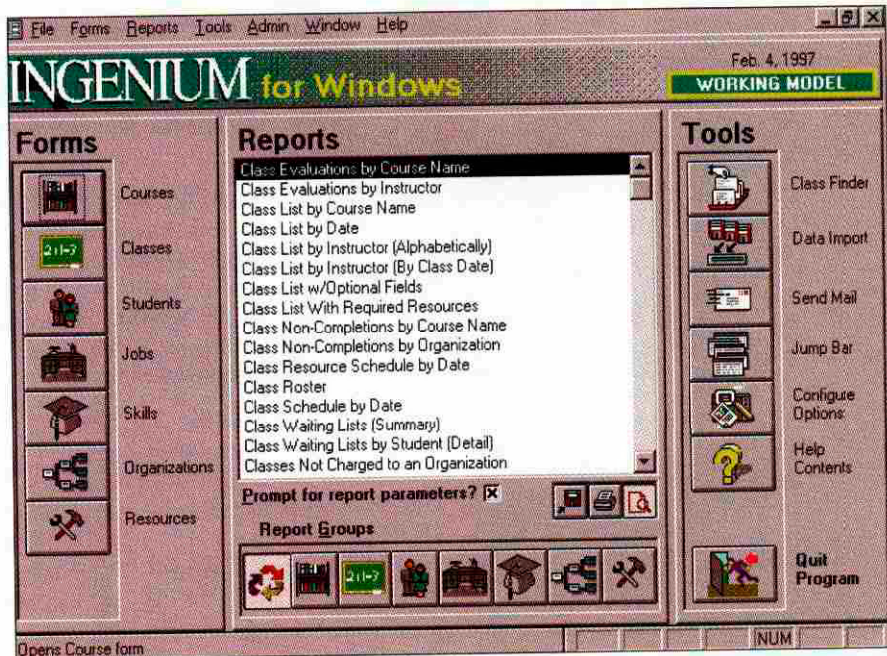

Ingenium Messenger from Meliora Systems can be used to coordinate training schedules and skill development planning. The program works over an organization's e-mail system or the Internet, so employees can check their skill inventories, register for training, and plan for future jobs at their convenience.

"Since Messenger empowers workers while automatically updating employee training records, it saves training administrators and human resource personnel valuable time," says Gordon Rogers, Meliora's founder and president.

This tool is helpful for organizations that have a globally dispersed workforce that relies on e-mail for much of its communication.

Features include

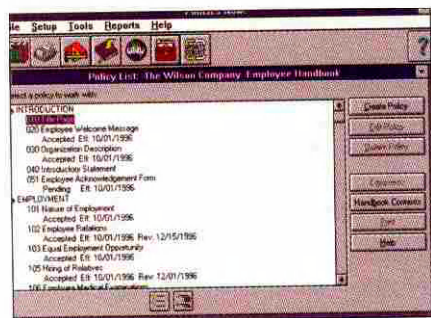

- ▶ skills inventory and gap analysis
- ▶ registration
- ▶ employee finder
- ▶ ingenium page.

The last feature generates course catalogues in a Web-page format for distribution and enables class registration over the Internet or a corporate intranet.

For more information, contact Meliora Systems, Rochester, New York, 716/461-1900, or visit the company's Web site <http://www.meliora.com>.

E-MAIL ESSENTIALS VIDEO

E-mail Essentials: The Legal and Effective Use of E-mail is a video-based training program from VideoLearning.

The program covers appropriate and inappropriate uses of this communication tool. It explains

- ▶ how e-mail works
- ▶ privacy and confidentiality issues
- ▶ e-mail etiquette
- ▶ e-mail harassment.

The program begins with e-mail essentials—short dramatizations that explore legal, human resource, and technology issues relating to e-mail. For example, "Lose Weight Now" shows the use of workplace e-mail to promote a personal business. "Sorry Wrong Address" looks at sending inappropriate, personal messages via e-mail.

The video comes with a facilitator's and user's guide. It includes participant handouts, a bibliography, activities, exercises, and questions for discussion. Management and employees' versions of the program are available for public- and private-sector organizations.

The 24-minute video costs $425 and can be rented for $150. For more information, contact VideoLearning, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, 800/622-3610.
