Over and Out

Enough already! Voicemail, email, more on the Internet than you could ever know or need to know. It's everything all the time. So what do we here at T&D do? We write more stuff. Go figure. But, at least, not only do we cover the phenomenon of Information Overload, we also include a lot of tips on how to deal with it, as you'll see in articles by Karl Albrecht, Jeanne Allert, and Barbara Hemphill.

Also be sure to read ASTD editor-in-chief Pat Galagan's story about Cisco's e-learning posse: a Harley riding ex-Marine in charge of the Internet Learning Solutions Group, the baseball-jacket-wearing female senior manager, others, and, of course, king of the "rounding error" quote, John Chambers.

Frequent T&D contributor Ruth Palombo Weiss, who usually writes about brain-based learning, this time tells how companies are helping employees become more creative, in turn making the companies more innovative and more competitive.

And don't miss the second installment of David Zahn's Diary of a Consultant—it's a literary feast, literally.
